Issue 262 22 August 2011

Hackney resident 'Marawa the Amazing' entertains the crowds at a Clarence Road tea party to celebrate the community spirit witnessed across the borough after the riot

HACKNEY communities have rallied together in a show of strength and pride in the aftermath of riots that rocked the country two weeks ago.

Hundreds gathered outside Hackney Town Hall to help the morning after 8 August; others organised an internationally reported tea party on one of the borough's worst hit streets, Clarence Road; and set up a fund to help a shopkeeper nearly bankrupted by looting to reopen.

Mayor of Hackney, Jules Pipe, ward councillors, and Council Chief Executive, Tim Shields, have been meeting with residents and businesses, community and faith leaders to discuss the best ways for the borough as a whole to move forward.

Hackney has had many visitors during the past fortnight: Prince Charles and the Duchess of Cornwall came to the Fairbridge centre in London Fields to announce a £2.5million investment in opportunities for young people; Labour leader, Ed Miliband, spoke to Mare Street shopkeepers, and attended a Hackney CVS community meeting; and Mayor of London, Boris Johnson, praised Stoke Newington fire station staff's work in both Hackney and Haringey.

The scale of the disturbances across England suggests looters thought punishment unlikely. However, arrests are increasing daily, at the time Hackney Today went to press, 123 arrests had been made so far in Hackney, with more set to follow.

Businesses and residents may be able to claim for compensation under the Riot (Damages) Act, even if they do not have insurance. The Act provides reimbursement for injury, destruction or stealing, to houses, shops and other buildings or their contents. People have 42 days from the time of the incident to make the claim.

Police officers in riot gear block move into Clarence Road, as violence broke out across the capital on 8 August

Riots wreak havoc

IT all started with the shooting by police of Mark Duggan in Tottenham on the afternoon of Thursday, 4 August.

The 29-year-old was killed as specialist firearms officers taking part in a covert operation tried to arrest him close to Tottenham Hale tube station.

An initial investigation by the Independent Police Complaints Commission found he was carrying a loaded gun, but did not open fire on police as first reported. These facts were not known at the time, however, and family and friends of the father-of-four led a protest, as a result, outside Tottenham police station two days later on Saturday, 6 August.

The initially peaceful demonstration spiralled out of control as protestors and police clashed, before the incident escalated into a full scale riot that saw cars, buses and buildings set alight and mass looting that left people homeless and the Message from the Mayor

LIKE many other parts of London and the UK, Hackney was the scene of terrible riots that wrought havoc on our streets on 8 August. The Council's cleaning teams had cleared the streets of virtually all the debris by 7.30am the next morning. But the effects on the victims, and the wider community, of that night's unjustifiable violence will last much, much longer. Whatever motivated individuals who took part in the rioting and looting – whether it was greed, anger, disaffection or just a momentary mob mentality – it was the lack of care for the effect they were having on others in their communities that was so disturbing. People were in fear for their lives, and local, small businesses were among those viciously targeted. In the days after the riots, I visited businesses and residents that had been affected, and met community and faith leaders. There was a genuine sense of shock that something like this could happen in the heart of our community and inevitably, many people have looked for reasons. Just one of the many contributing factors may have been that the unequal and deeply consumerist society we live in, was wrongly used by some to justify looting and thieving from their own town centre decimated.

By Sunday, 7 August, the unrest had spread to Wood Green, Enfield, Edmonton, Walthamstow, Islington, Dalston, Oxford Circus and Brixton. This was no longer about Mark Duggan's death however.

His family appealed for calm, but violent attacks on police and mass looting spread across the capital.

The first rumblings of trouble in Hackney began just before midnight on Sunday when a 20-strong group of men entered Kingsland Shopping Centre, E8, and smashed their way into two sports shops, Foot Locker and T-mobile. They also tried to break into JD Sports. Police were on the scene in minutes, and as a result 12 men were arrested for burglary and criminal damage.

However, this was just a taste of the violence to come. By Monday, 8 August, Hackney police had strong intelligence that large numbers of people were intent on causing maximum disorder in the borough that afternoon.

As a result, they put in an early bid for extra resources from elsewhere in the Met, and shops in and around Mare Street were alerted. Many chose to close early and put their shutters down at lunchtime.

Violence broke out at around 4pm with groups of people confronting police in the Narrow Way, outside Hackney Central station, and in Mare Street. Shop windows were smashed and premises looted, buses full of frightened commuters attacked with planks of wood, and police cars and officers pelted with bricks, bottles and rubbish bins.

“There has been much to be proud of in the way Hackney has responded”

Council buildings were closed at 4.30pm and as a police helicopter circled over the Town Hall, it was joined by those from TV news stations that broadcast the shocking scenes nationwide.

Riot police regained control of the streets in Hackney Central relatively quickly, but the violence had by now spread out to the Pembury estate where mobs set fire to cars and recycling bins, which were used to try and barricade roads.

Hackney police again secured further officers from across the Met and after 9pm mounted police were used to disperse large crowds across Hackney Downs.

But running battles continued throughout the night, with the Narrow Way and Clarence Road, in Clapton, forming the front line. Clarence Road saw some of the worst destruction, with many residents fleeing their homes in terror at the height of the violence, as shops were looted and vehicles set on fire.

By this time the violence had spread to the north, south, east and west of London, with images broadcast worldwide.

communities.

People who have far less than others in a society, understandably, can feel angry and disadvantaged, but the only legitimate way people can achieve their aspirations is through education, training and applying themselves. With Hackney's primary and secondary school results now above the national average, there is every hope that more young people than ever will have the opportunity to achieve their aspirations.

That's why, as Mayor, I will continue to put such an emphasis on supporting schools, raising standards and working towards equality of opportunity for all our young people, whatever their background. There has been much to be proud of in the way Hackney has responded to the riots: the local business people, determined to get up and running again and not be beaten, despite severe damage; the cleaning teams who worked through the night; the 200 volunteers who turned up at Hackney Town Hall offering to help with the clean up; the residents organising appeals to help the real victims whose livelihoods have been destroyed.

It is this spirit that defines Hackney and that will heal the damage inflicted on our community.

People power saves Siva's store

THE local shopkeeper who was left with only 25p in his pocket after looters devastated his Clarence Road grocery store has reopened thanks to donations from around the globe.

Siva Kandiah, 39, suffered an estimated £50,000 loss after rioters stormed his shop, stealing alcohol and cigarettes, wrecking the fixtures and attempting to set fire to the premises. The carnage was captured by a local professional photographer, despite rioters trying to steal her camera as she worked (see above).

Siva, who has owned the E5 grocery store for 11 years, said: "They destroyed everything, even the ceiling, shelves and electrical fittings. Take the money but why mess up the shop?"

Although Siva has building insurance, the cover does not extend to contents, so he was left devastated, knowing he would be unable to replace his stock. His heartbreak was broadcast around the world and a collective of residents moved quickly to set up an appeal fund to help him rebuild his business. So far, the fund has raised around £24,000.

One volunteer, Sarah Pletts of the Clapton Square user group, said: "He's a fantastic and popular shop owner who works really hard and has a personal relationship with his customers."

The Council and Hackney Homes supported Siva by replacing his windows and shutters, suspending business rates and giving practical advice.

While the shop was being repaired, Siva sold newspapers on a table.

He added: "The Council has taken away three skips worth of damage and there's still more."

"We're slowly getting back on our feet, and I'd like to thank all the local people who have been really good to us."

Riots hit retailers

A masked man walks past a burning car outside the Carhartt outlet store on Ellingfort Road; (below) looters help themselves to some of the products

RETAILERS hit by looters have been recovering with support from the Council and local community.

In total, 15 businesses suffered at the hands of rioters, including Carhartt, Burberry and JD Sports, with seven independent local traders faced with huge challenges as they try to replace stolen stock.

Daily visits by Council staff have been made to help clear away glass and waste in the immediate aftermath, and then to offer advice on business rates relief, compensation under the Riot Damages Act, and information about hardship loans. Shutters and shelving have been ordered in at a time when demand is at an all-time high across the country. And the Council has co-ordinated kind offers from volunteers, with a carpenter visiting Mare Street optician EyeLondon to help repair the damage.

Owner Margaret Asare was badly hit, with nearly £20,000 of frames stolen. She said: "They didn't differentiate between big stores, small businesses and the corner shop where they buy cigarettes and papers. For me it was pure malice."

Fourth generation family business Harris Electronics in Lower Clapton Road suffered an estimated £90,000 loss. As a member of the Euronics franchise, owner John Harris will have to foot the bill. Manager Demiz Saffet told how he saw rioters waiting outside. He said: "At about 5pm the road went quiet. Then a group started congregating on the corner opposite with bats and bottles looking in our direction. We decided to close up but 20 minutes later got a call from a neighbour to tell us they're breaking our windows."

Message from the police

The thin blue line

EVERY person who holds Hackney dear to their heart will be sickened by the mob mentality on 8 August that saw people robbed, property damaged and looted, and people injured, including 16 police officers and a 75-year-old woman, who suffered a fractured hip when pushed to the ground.

During the course of the evening, 52 people were arrested in Hackney for offences including violent disorder, robbery and burglary. There is now a London-wide operation to identify and bring to justice those others responsible. In Hackney, a dedicated team working with specialist detectives has so far made an additional 71 arrests, with more planned.

We have had a tremendous response from the public who have come forward with information. This has enabled us to arrest people in possession of stolen goods and to identify others involved from CCTV.

Extensive footage is still being examined, to ensure that as many as possible of those involved in violent disorder are brought to justice (see pages 10-11).

Looking at the emerging picture from arrests so far, while many reside in Hackney, there are significant numbers from as far afield as Kent and Essex. It is important to emphasise that those involved – while in the hundreds – are a tiny minority of a Hackney population of more than 240,000. It is easy to make an assumption that young people were primarily involved, but looking at arrests so far and CCTV footage, the age range is far wider, with people in their 30s, 40s and 50s included. The majority of young people in Hackney are decent, hardworking and law abiding and it is important that we all recognise that.

All leave for police officers and frontline staff has been cancelled with officers working extended hours to ensure a strong presence on Hackney's streets. Plans are already in place for this to continue over the coming weeks.

Hackney has more than 80 volunteer special constables, who give up their free time to patrol with regular officers.

I would also like to thank the London Fire Brigade, London Ambulance Service, Homerton hospital and Hackney Council for the part they have played over the past fortnight or so, each has been invaluable and it has been a true team effort. The biggest thanks, however, goes to the people of Hackney. The messages of support, the encouragement given to officers on patrol, the offers of cups of tea, have all meant a lot to us and we greatly appreciate your help.

Despite what happened on 8 August, Hackney has already shown that it has a strong sense of community spirit and a determination to move forward from these events.

A Council worker clears the remains of burnt out vehicles in Clarence Road

‘Proud’ street cleaner

FARUK Mulla was one of the Council street cleaners involved in the clear up. He worked almost a double shift.

He said: “When we heard what was going on, we weren’t worried, but we knew it was going to be messy.

“It was our job to make sure residents could wake up to a clear and clean morning.

“We didn’t see anything while the riots were happening, as we were kept in safe areas and the police would check if it was secure to do our job.

“Clarence Road was one of the messiest – I

Faruk: ‘we feel very proud and appreciate the feelings towards us’ think there was four tonnes of rubbish. Lots of burnt cars and looted things left on the floor.

“Some of us are fasting for Ramadan, but when you see even your manager working alongside you, you want to keep going despite the fast.

“And a lot of residents have thanked us and we feel very proud and appreciate the feelings towards us.”

The big sweep

AFTER watching TV footage of the riots on 8 August, residents must have feared what scenes of devastation would await them the next day.

But by 7.30am on Tuesday all the borough’s streets had been cleaned and the debris removed.

Dedicated street cleaners worked through the night to clear the roads of rubbish, broken glass, furniture, burnt out waste bins, and wrecked cars.

When the violence first began, Council cleaning crews were called back to Millfields Waste Depot to ensure their safety. But by 7pm, with help from CCTV to avoid danger areas, the teams returned to the streets, removing missiles used against the police, and other debris from trouble hotspots on Mare Street and the Narrow Way.

As the team moved to clear the rest of the borough into the night, trouble flared for a second time on the Narrow Way, and the crews returned at 3am to cleanse the area once again.

Riot police stood guard as street cleaners worked their way up the street into Clarence Road, Clapton Square and all the other areas affected by the riots.

There were around 20 burnt out cars with at least one still alight at the time.

Roads were washed down, burnt bins removed and by 7.30am most of the streets were already cleansed and returned to normal – even graffiti scrawled on a wall in Clarence Road was painted over.

The cleaning crews would usually finish at 2.30am, but worked on through so that when local people woke up on 9 August there were few indications of the terrible scenes of the night before.

Many community-minded residents wanted to do something to help however, and used the same social networking tools as the rioters to organise clean-up groups. Hundreds gathered outside the steps of Hackney Town Hall, with brooms in hand.

Senior Council officers and community leaders, informed them that most of the work had already been completed, but thanked them for their inspiring display of civic responsibility. Some residents then travelled to help other parts of London affected by the riots instead.

Mayor of Hackney, Jules Pipe, said: "The Council's cleaners were on the streets throughout the night and had cleared away all the debris, apart from a few burnt out cars, by 7.30am, and I would like to pay tribute to them for their hard work.

"I would also like to thank the several hundred residents and volunteers who turned up at Hackney Town Hall that morning offering to help clean up the borough.

"This shows overwhelming generosity and community spirit and many were keen to go and help in other parts of London when it was clear that the clean up in Hackney was already complete."

Your feedback

AS well as all the positive comments on social media networks like Twitter (above), some residents were moved to write to the Mayor of Hackney, Jules Pipe, and the Council's Chief Executive, Tim Shields directly. Below is just a snapshot of residents feelings:

"Just a short note to express sincere thanks to your street cleaning staff for their sterling work in clearing up the streets following the disturbances earlier this week – it was very evident how much effort had been put into this important work and on behalf of us all, and many of our staff who are Hackney residents, I send our sincere thanks."

"I wanted to register my admiration for the Council services. I came out at 8am and was amazed that last night's trouble had almost been erased. The weekly refuse collection/recycling services/street cleansing workers are always amazing. The amount of litter and illegal dumping that they have to deal with is extraordinary but it is never around for long. Hackney is so much cleaner and tidier than it was 10 years ago when I first moved here. Well done to everyone in those departments always, but especially today." "Thank you for the very impressive clean up of our streets in Hackney. After a very disturbing few days it was refreshing and heartening to see that the mindless morons who have brought havoc and fear to this borough won't win."

Cuppa tea?

Clarence Road played host to a community party to unite local people after the devastating riots

RESIDENTS from across the borough joined together to show Hackney's community spirit could not be destroyed by riots.

One week later local people, businesses and faith communities, supported by the Council, organised a tea party on Clarence Road, one of the worst hit areas in the borough. Around 400 people attended the 15 August event, covered by the BBC and TV stations from as far afield as Australia.

“ This is a strong community and that's shown in their support for people who've had a difficult time this week ”

Cakes and drinks were donated by Marks & Spencer's Narrow Way store – also attacked in the riots – with additional refreshments prepared by residents. There was also a notice board asking for people's thoughts and hopes for the future.

One of the Clarence Road

tea party organisers, Father Rob Wickham, rector of St John at Hackney, said: “To have a moment where everyone feels lifted on a street that exactly a week ago was used for looting and rioting can now be used for some really positive community work.

“The borough has had a rough ride over the last seven days – so to have a community coming together for an event like this sends out positive images for a borough that wants to get back on its feet and show that Hackney is alive, vibrant and open for business.”

Pembury estate resident Donna, who witnessed the riots from her flat, said: “I still feel completely safe in Hackney. Events like this just show you about the community in Hackney; it just pulls people together.”

Sarah Pletts, of the Clapton Square user group, added: “This is a strong community and that’s really shown in their support for people who’ve had a difficult time.”

Rosie, from Pembury estate, said: “Regardless of all the things that have gone on, we are still on the right path in Hackney.”

Cllr Sophie Linden, Deputy Mayor of Hackney, added: “This event shows the true community spirit of the vast majority of Hackney residents. It’s further evidence of the community pulling together to restore confidence.”

Pauline Pearce was dubbed ‘the Heroine of Hackney’

The ‘Heroine of Hackney’ speaks

THE Pembury estate grandmother, who became a world-wide internet sensation after being filmed challenging looters, remains convinced of the need for people to speak up.

Pauline Pearce, 45, known locally as Lady P, was captured giving a piece of her mind to rioters as they raided shops and set fire to cars.

She was dubbed the ‘Heroine of Hackney’ after shaking her walking cane in fury and reprimanding looters: “That woman in the shop there is working hard to make her business work and then you lot want to burn it up. For what? I’m ashamed to be a Hackney person cause we’re not all gathering together and fighting for a cause, we’re running down Foot Locker and thieving shoes.”

“It was a scary experience at the time of the riots, but the adrenaline just kicked in”

Her fearless act won her many fans and widespread media coverage. She said: “It was a scary experience at the time of the riots, but the adrenaline just kicked in. They weren’t justified. How can you burn your neighbour’s vehicle knowing they’re in a similar position to you? Some people said ‘they’ve got insurance’ but what about the man who didn’t have any contents insurance, what do you say to him.” The former jazz singer, who is open about a past conviction for drug-smuggling, now uses a walking stick due to a back injury and is recovering from breast cancer.

Speaking about her new-found fame, she added: “It’s just been unreal. I’m just P, nothing put in or taken out. But I’d just like to say to Hackney, sorry for all of the swearing.”

Nowhere to hide

Extensive CCTV footage was captured as rioting and looting occurred across London on 8 August

AT the height of the rioting and looting that engulfed London and other parts of the UK, those involved seemed to believe they were above the law.

What they didn't realise, however, was that all of the capital's shopping areas have extensive CCTV coverage, as do many individual retailers, from the small corner shop to the big department store.

In Hackney, the majority of the borough's streets are also covered by a network of 240 CCTV cameras, monitored 24 hours a day from a central control room, which the police and Council used to co-ordinate their response to the riots. Images from those cameras, like the ones on the page opposite, are also now being used to identify offenders.

Hackney police arrested 52 people during the riots, and at the time of going to press a further 71 had been arrested since, with 81 of the suspected offenders living in the borough.

The arrests are part of a London-wide investigation, co-ordinated by a 500-strong centralised team within the Met police, working under the codename Operation Withern. To date it has resulted in 1,802 arrests, with 1,033 people being charged across the capital.

Met Police Acting Commissioner, Tim Godwin, said: "Our tireless investigations to find those responsible for this appalling violence continue. Officers across the Met are carrying out great police work, day and night, to gather the kind of evidence that has led to these charges.

"The response from the public in coming forward with information has been fantastic. I want to thank all communities for their help over the last two weeks and ask for their continued support. If you know anyone involved in the disorder tell us – don't let them get away with it."

The enquiry is led by the Homicide and Serious Crime Command with support from detectives, officers and police staff from across the Met. More than 120 officers are pouring over 20,000 hours of CCTV footage and gathering further material from businesses and individual members of the public.

A large number of people have appeared in court and while some have already been convicted and received prison sentences many cases have been remanded to Crown Court.

Candid camera

STOKE Newington PC Naz Ladik, police liaison officer in the Council's CCTV control room, describes the scenes on 8 August.

"Knowing what happened in Tottenham the day before, we were anticipating disturbances. So by the time groups gathered on the Narrow Way, we'd already contacted the borough police headquarters and other police services to start directing resources.

"We have about 15 cameras with 15 hours of footage in areas near Hackney Central alone. There was excellent coverage of the Narrow Way area, but we still monitored other parts of the borough so if other new groups of rioters formed, officers could go to those places also.

"We were also letting Council workers and fire brigade commanders know what was going on, so they could stop blazes taking hold, and clear up when the area was safe and no longer a crime scene.

"As part of Operation Withern, we're going through all of the images of people to find those who broke the law."

All your recycling questions answered

Q: I noticed that recycling banks in my local area have been removed. Why was that and when will they be put back as I have lots I need to recycle?

A: Following the riots in Hackney, a number of recycling banks across the borough were removed from the streets at the request of the police at very short notice.

We are in close contact with the police and are hopeful of returning these recycling banks to their normal location as soon as possible. All recycling bins on estates that were destroyed or badly damaged have also been identified and removed. The Council's recycling team is in the process of replacing these to make sure everyone can continue to recycle as much as possible. Any bins that are damaged can be reported via the recycling hotline on: 020 8356 4946.

A PROJECT to protect and increase meadow habitat across London has been launched this month.

'Mad About Meadows' aims to raise awareness of the decline of urban meadows and the species that depend on them.

Nationally, 97 per cent of meadowland has vanished since the 1930s.

Meadows support a huge range of wildlife including a diminishing wild bee population, birds such as the house sparrow, whose numbers are also in decline, and an array of wild flowers.

The project is run by London in Bloom, with the London 2012 Changing Places programme, London Wildlife Trust and other partners including Hackney Council. It hopes to develop meadowland in London through better management, restoration, and recreation schemes, as well as creating a technical advisory group and online information portal so the public, local authorities and other organisations can take part.

Carlo Laurenzi, London Wildlife Trust Chief Executive, said: "With 3.8million gardens in London, people can make a real difference by creating their own marvellous mini-meadows at home."

Kynaston Gardens lands £48k overhaul fund

A DOWN-AT-HEEL green space has been awarded £48,225 to give it a face-lift.

The Friends of Kynaston Gardens received the grant from Groundwork UK and the Big Lottery Fund's Community Spaces programme.

The N16 gardens – which in the past have faced problems with anti-social behaviour and street drinking – are owned and managed by the Council, which is working in partnership with Groundwork UK and the Friends to carry out the improvements.

Matt Dillon, from the Friends of Kynaston Gardens, said: "This is brilliant news and means that soon the

A sundial could be a feature of the revamped Kynaston Gardens

once-neglected space on Kynaston Avenue will be blooming with a community garden and children's play space which everyone can enjoy."

Cllr Jonathan McShane, Cabinet Member for Health & Community Services, said: "This shows what can be done when the Council and the community work together. Hackney has many little green treasures cared for by volunteers who are doing a great job. I'm looking forward to seeing the plans become a reality for this green space."

Action plan for future – what do you think?

THE Council wants to know what residents think of its plans to protect and enhance wildlife in the borough over the next five years.

Hackney is holding a 12 week long consultation on a proposed Bio-diversity Action Plan (BAP).

In areas like Hackney, biodiversity plays a vital role in cleaning the air, reducing the effect of 'urban heat islands' which create higher than average temperatures in the city in summer, and helping to control water run-off and so reduce flooding.

The plan has identified six priority habitats including school grounds and woodlands like Abney Park. It also identifies the most important species found in the borough like birds including swifts and jays, to plants like honeysuckle and the Maiden's blush moth.

Hackney's parks and green spaces provide opportunities for people to experience nature close at hand, as well as valuable space for urban wildlife.

Covering 97 hectares

On the lookout: the Council wants feedback from residents on its biodiversity plan for the coming years of natural habitat such as woodland, meadow and rivers – equivalent in size to 160 football pitches – they are home to a number of important plants and animals including house sparrows and Britain's rarest native tree – the Black Poplar.

Wildlife is also found in the built and urban environment. Buildings and structures can provide homes for a range of creatures including bats, birds and plants.

It has also been shown that contact with the natural environment can improve wellbeing and reduce stress.

Cllr Jonathan McShane, Cabinet Member for Health, Social Care and Culture, said: "Improving biodiversity and protecting the range of plants and animals we have in Hackney is a priority for the Council. We want to know what you think of our proposals to conserve and enhance these precious areas in Hackney over the next five years."

Consultation runs until 24 October. To give your views, visit: www.hackney.gov.uk/biodiversity-consultation

PREVIEW

London International Animation Festival

26 August – 4 September, Various locations

The weird wide world of animation: with all its funny talking 3D animals and esoteric reflections of the human condition. London International Animation Festival neatly packages the best of the broad genre in its return this August.

Holding a day of family shows, Hackney's Rio cinema is to screen shorts including 'The Dog Who Was A Cat Inside' and 'Fat Hamster', a tale about a lardy rodent whose wife is determined he loses weight (3 September).

► For more info, visit: www.liaf.org.uk

The bulk of programming though is just outside the borough at Barbican, City of London, to coincide with its summer-long 'Watch Me Move' animation festival. Events include master-classes from the man behind the computer generated images in 'I, Robot' and 'Aeon Flux' (27-28 August); Poland gets its deserved time in the spotlight as one of the medium's leaders (28-29 August); there's a British showcase (1 September); and a judge and audience-selected award show closes 10 days of stop-motion entertainment (4 September).

Word play

Win An A to Z of Twords book

Mr Gresty is a Hackney-based illustrator, designer and printmaker, as well as a long-term admirer of the English language. It's a relationship that began at school, where he was baffled when people tried to teach him to read phonetically, but remained fascinated by multiple meanings and wordplay.

'Twords' are words like ladybird or breakfast that have a completely different meanings when split in half, says the designer.

He adds: "I started to hear these words in conversations and I would note them down. In no time I had hundreds, a full A to Z."

Originally starting as an exhibition project, he decided to compile a book instead.

An A to Z of Twords breaks some of them down with bright illustrations and is an opportunity for children (and adults) to see words and the world differently.

'An A to Z of Twords' is Mr. Gresty's first book, with two more in the making.

The 3,910 mile journey from London to Lahore, Pakistan, may seem a little shorter when a collaborative trans-continental arts project begins in both cities. 'Slice: Lahore-London' will draw an imaginary line between Liverpool Street Station and Lahore Central Station, with artists from both countries studying the first mile at either end using a variety of interactive media.

Tracing the lines of human migration and colonialism, artworks, stories, dances, music and poems will be forged from the physical and social fabric at either end, with the aim of promoting dialogue between the two distinct but historically linked cities.

Among the works currently under construction are a dance in an East End multistorey carpark, the engraved missive 'I love you' on a tree trunk in a Lahore shrine and a study of life on the peripheries of the Punjabi capital's railway system.

The resulting works and the public responses they evoke will be exhibited at venues in London and Lahore, as well as in a purpose-built online forum.

REVIEW

Field Day and The Apple Cart

Victoria Park, London, E3, 6 and 7 August

THE more festivals that arrive, the more some feel like games of chance. Good acts, weather, sound systems and crowds are all gambled for when paying the entrance fee to mosh face deep in a stranger's armpit.

Field Day (6 August) got the balance pretty much right this year, though its new festival The Apple Cart (7 August) should probably take the crown as the more inspired of the two on a rain splattered weekend.

Saturday's Field Day is known for its uber-cool crowd and cutting edge acts. Dubstep DJ Benga started off strongly, but the set tailed off, unhelpt by the quiet sound-system and loud nearby fairground. On the main stage, The Coral reminded us of their 1960s-style indie music; even nature helped along the psychedelia by delivering a double rainbow.

Singer-songwriter Jamie Woon was a revelation, growing with confidence as he performed tempo guitar soul to disco. Other big drawers were found in satellite activities, such as country games and the food and drink delivered by local businesses.

They were all ideas further developed for The Apple Cart, which on paper catered more for families, with book and magic tents, a vintage market, comedy and a more holistic approach to festivals.

Though that didn't stop a few hilariously foul-mouthed performances in the cabaret tent. Bourgeois and Maurice were as camp as they were entertaining with catchy pop tunes loosely based on chart hits.

A little later, Chilly Gonzales gave an outstanding turn. Bitter at being usurped as a headliner by piano comedian Tim Minchin, the self-styled musical genius asked the audience to chant his name throughout the Australian's show, proposed the links between baroque music and deceased rap star ODB and gave a heart-stopping rendition of his Apple iPad advert hit 'Never Stop'. Plus Gonzales got the audience involved in a weather chant that somehow did stop the downpour to bring out the sun for an original and enjoyable day.

Ship ahoy!

Levi Peterkin and Omoyemi Aileru set sail for 11 days aboard the ship, Stavros S Niarchos CLASSROOMS were swapped for ship decks when two Hackney students took part in an 11-day voyage manning the yards of a tall ship.

Skidders' Academy's Omoyemi Aileru and Levi Peterkin, both 17, were selected by their school for the Tall Ships Youth Trust Voyage of Achievement.

Along with 48 other students from across the country, the youngsters scaled masts, scrubbed decks, kept watch and practised dealing with 'man overboard' and other safety drills around the clock.

The trip began in Newcastle, with stopovers in Leith, Scotland, and the Dutch port of Scheveningen, before finally dropping anchor near Tower Bridge, London.

Throughout the voyage, the students were mentored by an experienced Tall Ships Youth Trust crew. The Trust's Operations Director, Tim Law, said: "The students have been living in close quarters with each other in a new and challenging environment.

"They have forged friendships, faced challenges and taken part in new experiences – at the same time developing skills that will stand them in good stead for the future."

The ship, Stavros S Niarchos, is a 60 metre long, steel brig dedicated to working with young people aged 14 to 25-years-old at sea.

More than 500 young people have taken part in the Voyage of Achievement scheme since it was launched 11 years ago.

New school gets local backing

A NEW secondary school could open in the borough after draft proposals received strong support from residents.

More than 200 people responded to a consultation by The Learning Trust, which asked for views on whether a new institution should be run as an academy or independent free school. Government funding is only available for these two options.

Roughly 70 per cent of those who responded were in favour of an academy, while 10 per cent wanted a free school. The Learning Trust therefore backed the academy idea.

Mossbourne and City academies have both expressed an interest in running the new school. If either is successful, they will work with

The Learning Trust and Council to secure financial backing from the scheme.

The new academy could be built on the site of Cardinal Pole RC lower school in Victoria Park Road, E9, which is due to move to a new building on Morning Lane in 2012. The lower school is Grade II listed so any building work would have to preserve its existing character.

Steve Belk, Acting Chief Executive of The Learning Trust, said: "The feedback received through the consultation has given us a clear direction as we seek to create a new secondary school for Hackney.

"We'd like to thank those who took time to give us their views and we look forward to working with the community as we take forward our plans."

One Year to Go celebration

RANDALL Cremer School celebrated 'One Year To Go' until London 2012 with a day of multi-discipline Olympic and Paralympic sporting action.

From duels between young competitors at Fighting Fit Fencing Club to ball tricks by Shoreditch Basketball Academy members, pupils got an opportunity to see athletes display their skills. There were also gymnastic and taekwondo shows and Hackney-born Olympic long jump hopeful JJ Jegede gave a motivational speech. Schoolchildren learnt facts about other Olympic countries, created banners and completed a replica torch relay as part of their partnership work with Games organisers.

PE Coordinator Fiona Solomon added: "The point of organising this event was to give children a sense of excitement with regards to 2012.

"Being a school in one of the host boroughs, it is important for them to understand why the Olympics coming to London is so special and a crucial part of history. It also gave them a chance to hear from and see professional athletes who demonstrate that nothing is impossible."

The future of television

SKINNERS' Academy students compared their experience filming a local festival to being like 'BBC reporters and camera crew'.

Sixth-formers from the N4 school were asked to document youth sports festival 'One Movement' as part of a BBC training scheme.

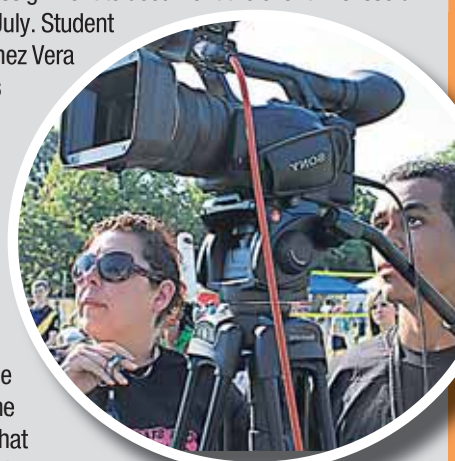

After receiving training in broadcast quality digital technology and the latest editing techniques, they were given their assignment to document the event in Clissold Park on 30 July. Student Daniela Gomez Vera said: "It was an amazing experience. We got the chance to be like BBC reporters and camera crew.

Seeing all the people at One Movement that are excited about the Olympics and were trying to get involved as much as possible was great."

The project was organised by Rep London, a business skills programme for young people across the host boroughs. A spokesperson from BBC 21st Century Classroom, which carried out the training, said: "Skidders' students were keen to learn and showed potential aptitude to enter the world of media – highlighting exactly the reason why it's important to engage young people with programmes like this. We'll look out for them in the future."

Hackney's Youth Parliament points out the positive work done by the borough's young people such as the Hackney Jam event

United we stand

HACKNEY'S Youth Parliament has called on young and old to work together to address problems that sparked the riots.

A statement released by the young people elected to represent their peers in the borough, said: "After the past few days of destruction and riots in our beloved borough, the pain and disappointment still sits in everyone's hearts. From young people to old, we were all affected by these unfortunate events.

Hackney young people are shocked and worried about the situation. But we know recent events will not discourage their efforts to make Hackney a better, safer and respected place.

"Whatever may have triggered the riots to come to Hackney, we feel the next step is to move on and address the problems together as a borough.

"We know young people played a part in these events; but it was not just young people and not just young people from our borough. We need to show our support for every resident affected, and that includes supporting the vast majority of young people who were not involved and may now feel demonised and scrutinised as a result.

"Hackney's young citizens have done an enormous amount of work that has benefited our community, helping diminish negative stereotypes. There has been educational improvement in schools and colleges in Hackney. Nearly 4,000 young people took part in the Hackney Youth Parliament Election. This summer there have been many positive activities young people have put on for other young people, such as the Hackney JAM, a music event which attracted over 250 people from across the borough.

"We will continue to represent young people's views to the police, to elected councillors and to other organisations. Hackney Youth Parliament will not stop speaking to and interacting with young people."

Youth debate on riots

By Michelle Stannard, 24

YH! World travelled to Westminster Central Hall on 12 August for a debate by young people that offered opinions on the riots and potential solutions.

Organised by Arrival Education, a collective aiming to change the way young people are viewed, the 'Not In Our Name' event was also attended by journalist crews from BBC, Sky and MTV.

For a lot of the people there, the riots didn't come as a surprise. While no one condoned rioting, many had a strong understanding of where it was coming from. One said: "It's so hard to get jobs. To stay in school is so hard and if you get kicked out of school then where do you go?"

"They don't see that they're mashing up their community...they just see it as a way to get at the Government," said another.

Solutions were also offered and, overall, people wanted to see more opportunities for young people and less racism and stereotyping.

One young person said: "The community needs to say, 'you are still part of our community'."

YH World reporters get young people's take on the riots

"It was not mostly kids. Most of the looters I saw were at least 20. I went down to the riots in Dalston and I only saw a handful of people that looked under 18."

"It's bad that they're doing it in shops and a lot of them haven't got a reason to be doing it except that they find it fun."

"It's giving a bad image to the tourists that are coming to the country and it might affect how the Olympics will be carried out and it makes the people scared. I'm really scared of going out in London now."

"I don't think there's a quick fix, tensions are high and a lot of people have no hope. Now the rioters are just ruining their own communities."

"Tottenham was understandable but it's stupid it happened in other places. Why would you attack shops? People are moaning about jobs but by doing it people are going to lose jobs – you're messing up businesses."

has been compiled with help from staff and volunteers at YH World – a social enterprise that produces a website full of info about events, courses, and general happenings in Hackney.

The Eureka! exhibition at Homerton hospital displays experimental pieces of art by patients from its neurological rehabilitation unit

The art of good health

A NEW Homerton hospital exhibition created by brain injury patients celebrates the 'humour and humanity of an otherwise unseen group', according to curator Shaun Caton.

'Eureka!' features a display of experimental pieces made in art workshops over the past year by people who have been treated at the hospital's Regional Neurological Rehabilitation Unit.

Classes are offered to patients with brain injuries as part of multi-disciplinary therapeutic treatment.

Shaun praised the ingenuity and vision of the show's artists. He said: "The art works are vivid collages, abstract paintings, intricate drawings and wonderful mixed media works, which evoke memories and stimulate the imagination."

Homerton encourages art therapy in the hospital by maintaining an extensive collection of contemporary art, hosting regular exhibitions with major museums, and forming creative partnerships with the local community.

All the works in this latest exhibition are for sale with proceeds helping to fund the art workshops. The show runs until 18 November.

News in brief

Homerton hospital launches patient feedback survey

PATIENTS being treated or cared for at Homerton hospital are being asked to comment on their experiences. Some will receive the NHS National Patients' Survey through their letterbox over the coming weeks. The annual survey is an important guide for the hospital; feeding back opinions on food standards, cleanliness and how patients feel they are communicated with by staff. Chief Nurse Charlie Sheldon said: "Unfortunately, in recent years, only a relatively small number of our patients who were contacted actually responded to the survey or filled it in completely.

"We are keen to know more from our patients about whether or not we are getting our services right. We urge those patients who get this year's survey to fill it in and send it back. This will help us to get better and improve the experience for all patients in future."

Fertility advice sessions open

FREE fertility information sessions are now being held at Homerton hospital.

Among the advice available will be help for individuals and couples wanting to know more about the causes and treatment of infertility, improving fertility, and egg and sperm donation.

There will also be talks with videos and slides. The sessions are set to take place in the hospital's main lecture theatre at 6.30pm on the first Wednesday of every month. For more info, visit: www.homerton.nhs.uk/fertility

Disability 'webinars' launched

A SERIES of web seminars are being launched for residents with disabilities who are striving to live more independently.

The Council, in partnership with new media firm SunnierDays, will stream live 'webinars' every two weeks throughout September and October. Each session aims to profile inspirational real-life stories, useful resources, and practical suggestions that could lead to positive changes in disabled residents' quality of life.

SunnierDays founder Martyn Sibley, who has Spinal Muscular Atrophy, will host the webinars. Themes are set to be on independent living, including securing employment or benefits, and accessible housing; as well as accessing local leisure facilities; planning and taking holidays; and making the most of newly introduced personalised care packages.

The sessions are funded by the Council as part of its Transformation of Adult Social Care programme. Martyn said: "Being a Hackney resident I can bring local knowledge to my content. The benefits of the project are to Hackney's disabled people, its health care sector and everyday people because inclusion benefits communities."

SunnierDays founder Martyn Sibley will host the webinars

SunnierDays webinars are due to take place on 7 and 21 September, and 5 and 19 October at 2pm

each day. For more info on how to join in, visit: www.hackney.gov.uk/disability-webinars.htm

FIRST STEPS
 to home ownership in London

Open house

LOCAL communities have been committed to providing homes for their poor and elderly residents for more than a 1,000 years.

Shoreditch has a long history of such social housing – it was a semi-rural area near the City of London, where the merchant guilds that funded many charities were based – and had one of the highest density of charities and almshouses anywhere in London.

The earliest Shoreditch almshouse was established in 1592 through the will of John Fuller, a judge and former Treasurer of the Inner Temple, who left money for an almshouse for 12 women.

This was built by his widow on the south side of Old Street and known as Fuller's Hospital. Rebuilt in 1787, the institution was eventually cleared and residents moved to Wood Green in 1865 as part of a united parish almshouse. (A fire station and Shoreditch Town Hall were later built on the site.)

Lady Lumley's Almshouses in Shepherdess Walk, N1, were founded with money left in 1657 by Elizabeth, Viscountess Lumley, to the parishes of St Botolph's Aldgate and St Botolph's Bishopsgate.

After 15 years, however, no suitable site had been found in either parish, so in 1672 the almshouses were built in Shoreditch instead. Rebuilt in 1822, the house finally closed in 1898.

In 1749, Mary Westby, from Cambridgeshire, founded a house in Pitfield Street, N1, for 10 Protestant or dissenting widows or spinsters, and it became known locally as 'The Old Maids' Almshouses'.

The School Board for

London purchased the site in 1881, agreeing to compensate almswomen for the loss of their homes and also for removal expenses. The money from the sale of the site was invested and funds used by the charity to provide pensions for poor female Protestant dissenters.

Also in Pitfield Street stood Aske's Hospital, founded in the will of Robert Aske in 1689 by the Haberdashers' Company.

The scientist and architect Robert Hooke designed the building which housed 20 poor freemen of the company and provided a school for 20 of their sons.

The extensive grounds were eventually built upon and the original grand building was replaced by a smaller one during the 1820s. The hospital closed in 1873, after which the Shoreditch Vestry persuaded the London County Council to use the building to house the Shoreditch Technical Institute from 1898.

Among later charitable ventures in the borough, was the almshouse on the north side of Hackney Road, in a converted engine and watch house built in 1825 in St Leonard's churchyard.

Four almsmen lived there, two of whom were required to have served as parish watchmen. They also later moved to Wood Green and the almshouse was demolished in 1904. The site is now a children's playground.

Of the charitable housing institutions of Shoreditch, the only one still standing is in Kingsland Road.

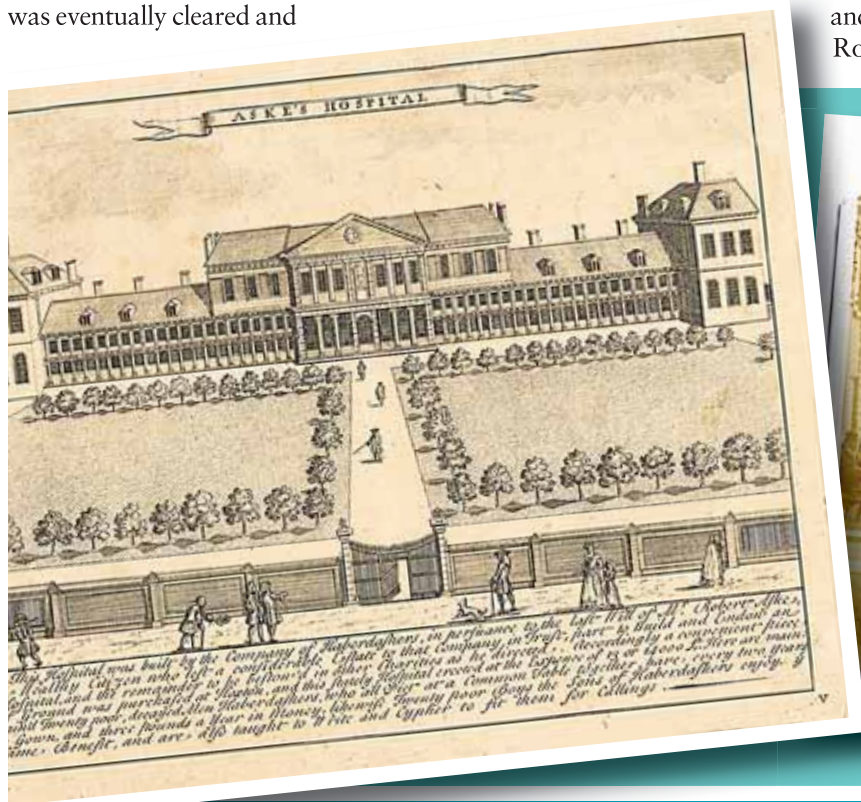

It originally housed the Ironmongers' Almshouses. Founded in 1714 with a bequest from Sir Robert Geffrye, twice master of the Ironmongers' Company and former Lord Mayor of London, the almshouse housed 50 people. In the early 1900s, the company decided to leave Shoreditch, which by then was felt to be 'overcrowded and unhealthy'.

The site was sold and threatened with demolition, but was saved through public protest and reopened as a museum in 1914. Now a Grade I listed building and named after its original founder, The Geffrye Museum celebrates the history of the English domestic interior and includes a restored almshouse that portrays the living conditions of pensioners in the 18th and 19th centuries.

The Mayor and Councillors

Councillors are elected by Hackney residents and serve for four years. The last borough elections were in May 2010.

Councillors have a range of responsibilities, including helping to oversee the Council and its services. They hold advice surgeries where residents can meet their local representative and ask them to take up issues that may be of concern.

Generally they can help with Council related matters, but if the issue is the responsibility of another person or organisation, councillors can often point people in the right direction and tell residents who they need to see.

Hackney has 57 councillors representing areas called wards – illustrated in the map opposite.

Please note that some councillors do not hold surgeries in August. To check surgery times, call: 020 8356 3373. More info: www.hackney.gov.uk/l-mayor-cabinet-councillors.htm

Recipes straight from the ovens at Waterhouse

www.waterhouserestaurant.co.uk

THIS is the latest in a series of recipes courtesy of Waterhouse – an eco-friendly restaurant alongside the Regent's Canal in Shoreditch. This week, Chef Jahni Lake (above), shares a recipe with a fruity, spicy twist. He said: "This is a family recipe, one I've been eating since I was a kid. My mum used to make this at least once a week and would call it 'jerk' chicken, but technically it isn't because jerk seasoning is a very specific thing. I'm not worried what you call it though because it is definitely delicious."

Ingredients

- 1 bunch of spring onions, finely sliced
- Handful of coriander
- Handful of parsley
- 2 teaspoons of chilli flakes
- 1 lime (juice only)
- 1 tsp mixed spice
- 2 chicken breasts, skin off, thickly sliced
- 2 tbsp olive oil for frying
- 1 bag of mixed salad leaves
- Handful of cherry tomatoes, halved
- 1 carrot, sliced julienne (into long matchsticks)
- 4 Oranges, juice only
- Olive oil for dressing

- Marinate the chicken in a bowl for 30 minutes
- Heat the olive oil in a pan and then fry the chicken for 3 to 4 minutes until nicely coloured
- To make your orange dressing mix 250ml of olive oil with the juice of four oranges. Give it a good shake up in a jar or better still a squeeze bottle (it's more than you'll need but you can put the rest of your dressing in the fridge for another day)
- Put salad in a bowl with the carrots, tomatoes and hazelnuts
- Add your chicken, a squeeze of your dressing and salt and pepper, and toss. Taste and adjust your dressing as required

Method

- Put half of the spring onions, the parsley and a

BBQ consultation ends soon

A DESIGNATED barbecue area is being trialled in London Fields throughout the summer.

The move has been introduced to protect grass across the park from scorching. If the trial – which is taking place by the south west entrance to the park, near Broadway Market – proves successful it is set to become long-term policy. The proposed restrictions include:

- BBQs will not be permitted outside the designated area
- Only BBQs on stands will be allowed
- Anyone not using a BBQ stand will be asked by Council staff to do so, or put it out
- BBQs will only be allowed up till 9pm

Visitors to London Fields can try out the trial BBQ area

- A specially designed metal bin will be provided for the disposal of BBQ waste
- Signage will be installed to provide information on the location of the designated BBQ area.

Residents and park users can comment on the proposals up until 31 August. To have your say complete an online survey at: www.hackney.gov.uk/londonfields

E-mail: consultation@hackney.gov.uk, including

'BBQs at London Fields' in the subject line.

Paper copies of questionnaires are also available on request. Send completed questionnaires and/or written views to: Freepost LON 18819, The Consultation Team, London Borough of Hackney, Mare Street, E8 1EA.
